

Historical Context

- ◆ Muskham Vale was the major north/south crossing of the River Trent.
- ◆ The River Trent [Trespasser] changed its course(s) during floods and the crossing point shifted.
- ◆ The shift appears to be downstream; from South Muskham [Muscha], then Mill Lane/Crab Lane, then Trent Ford Road [14th C].
- ◆ The River Trent was the division between North & South.
- ◆ Hold the River Trent crossing and you protected the South from Northern Invaders.
- ◆ The River Trent flowed east from Nottingham area and turned North at Newark.
- ◆ The River Witham flowed parallel to Trent, leaving a “narrow” dry route to North Lincs.
- ◆ Muskham Vale offered a “safe” crossing.

Trent Ford Road

also known as:
Holme Lane
Shady Lane

Muskham Cross

Muskham Cross is recorded as 14th Century. There is a matching cross in Holme and both are believed to be signposts to the ford.

Trent Ford Road 1735

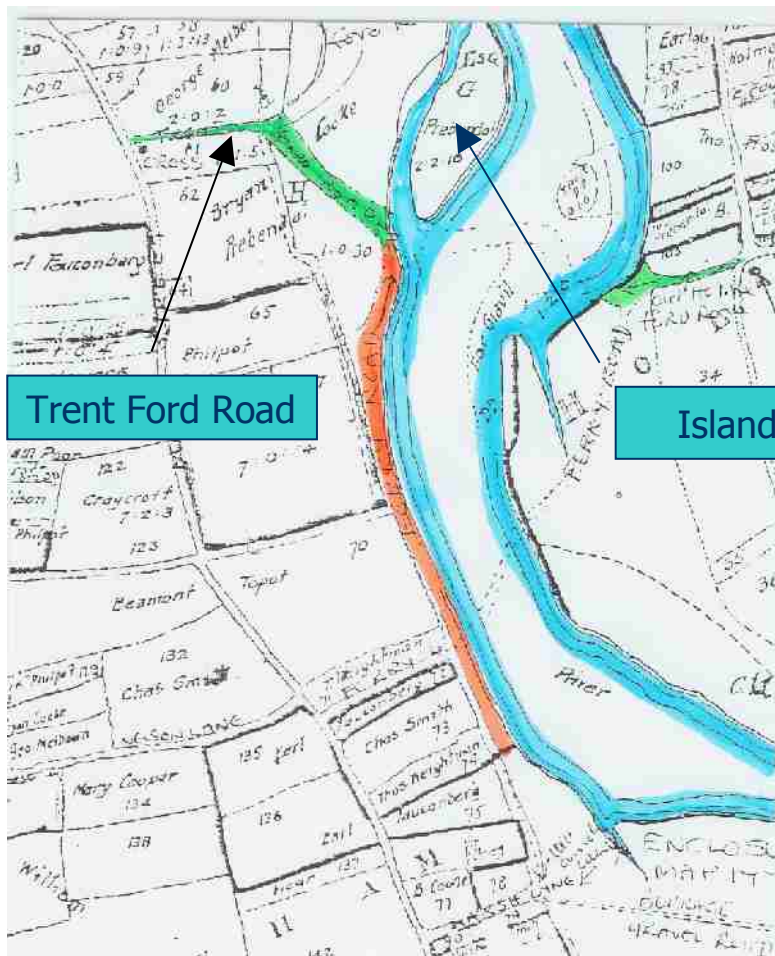

Islands

Trent Ford Road

Old River Channels
"Paleochannels"

Trent Ford Road Past and Present

Trent Ford Road 1772

Trent Ford Road

Island

Trent Ford Road in July 2009

The Main Street entrance to Trent Ford Road lies at the north end of North Muskham on the right-hand side just before the road forks left over the A1.

The Main Street entrance to Trent Ford Road with The Shades (a listed building) shown in the background.

Trent Ford Road Past and Present

The historic Muskham Cross monument with Trent Ford Road foreground and The Shades background.

The route of Trent Ford Road leading through to Dickinson Way, the lake and the recently opened riverside walk.

Trent Ford Road Past and Present

The entrance to Trent Ford Road as seen from Dickinson Way.

A view across the lake with the River Trent beyond as seen from the Dickinson Way end of Trent Ford Road.

Turning left out of Trent Ford Road and crossing the road leads to the path that goes around the lake and a pleasant riverside walk to the south end of the village, the Ferry pub, St Wilfrid's church and South Muskham village beyond.